NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT — Jon Pickard FAIA, has been elected to The College of Fellows of the American Institute of Architects. He has substantively contributed to built contemporary high-rise and corporate architecture worldwide. Pickard's expertise in the design of large-scale buildings with their inherent architectural, urban design, technical and economic challenges is grounded in the balance of three fundamental drivers: Environment, Community, and Workplace. Representative of his skill in achieving this balance, 300 North LaSalle, a 60-story LEED-CS Gold certified tower in Chicago, provides abundant natural light, extraordinary views and reconnects the city to the river with cascading public gardens. Previously, he was Senior Associate and Design Team Leader for Cesar Pelli & Associates where he led, among others, the team that realized the Petronas Towers. He serves as a visiting critic at several universities and currently serves on the Yale School of Architecture Dean's Council.
